Steedman's Operations. How a Rebel Divine is Served.

The report in circulation in the city yesterday, to the effect that Hood had succeeded in crossing the river, is unfounded. Of this there can be little question. We have intelligence from Gen. Thomas to day before yesterday at which time he was pressing Hood upon the north bank of the Tennessee, with all the means in his power.

Hood was trying to lay his pontoons but his working parties were making little or no progress, as our gunboats were within range, and were shelling vigorously. It is believed the laying or the pontoons can be entirely prevented, and if so, Hood cannot escape.

Steedman, at the head of a force, the numbers of which is contraband, reach ed Decatur on the 24th, six days ago and is operating upon Hood, with great energy. This intelligence, as well as that relating to the operations of the gunboats, is not flying rumor, but is en tirely reliable.

When Steedman was passing through Huntsville, he learned that the notoriou Dr. R. ss, the New School Presbyterian preacher who has long been notoriou as a pro-slavery lecturer, was there and that he had been, during the late rebel occupation, a very noisy declaimer against the Government, and had in voked hell fire without stint upon the Yankees, and accordingly his arrest was ordered. While the Reverend geng t'eman was in duress, two wealthy citizens of the vicinity, called on Gen. Steedman, and offered him a bribe, At this, the General grew a little wrathy, and made use of sundry expressions a great deal more emphatic than polite, and wound up-by ordering them under screet, also; and the tric are to be sent to this city, and will probably grace our penitentiary for s

That Engrmous Liav.

We have occasionally spoken of the character of "Druid," the Munchausez Bultimore correspondent of the New York World; and though we don't care to give the fellow notoriety, yet, as the representative of a class of rebel sympathizers, we produce the following ravings of his, under date of the 18th, just after hearing of the late victary over Hood: *

The public, now, is expected to rejoice over a batch of "victories" which has just been announced by telegraph by the Secretary of War. But does the public forget that it was likewise ex pected to rejoice over the "victories" gained by Gen, Grant in his overland march in May, and over the victory of Gen. Sherman at Atlanta in September? These latter were, in one sense, really great victories. Compared with them, those which Mr. Stanton is now blow. ing his horn about, amount to nothing at alt. Yet now at this distance of time, what do these great victories amount to? Where are the fruits which we were promised they should bear? Every one of them have proved barren of any good results.

It does not require any great amount Most of Hood's wagon trains, camp equipage of accuteness, to interpret these lines as the rayings of a disappointed man. It looks very much like some of the speeches of Jeff. Davis, while on his late Georgia tour. Druid then perpetrates the following:

Out of the 2,200,000 who had enlisted for the war, only 400,000 or 450,000 survived One million eight hundred thousand of them, had perished, either in battle or from sickness.

The above is, of course, written to one fifth of the general losses incurred encourage the South; but it is father by the rebels during the last two too much of a good thing; the story is months. In addition to these we are a little too big for even the gullability yet to hear from Davidson's five thouof the rebels. Druid, if he expects to minister real encouragement to his Louisiana and Alabama. Mosgan's brief friends, should tell something that they would probably believe. He gives the following as the present | How enormous, then, must be the disstrength of the rebel army :

With a loss of 150,000 men per year, now that no more recruits can be had, how long will the above army, even at Druid's figures, retain its organization. But the real truth is, that the rebels Sheridan are preparing to concentrate; and the result is not doubtful.

Sixty Bays.

We have frequently heard propheies to the effect that sixty days would end the rebellion, &c.; and even Seccetary Seward has occasionally injulged in this species of declamation; but while these predictions have all remained unfilled, it may not be im proper to review what the last sixty lays have accomplished toward a work o desirable, as the re-establishment of the authority of the general governnent.
